Who has parental responsibility?

For children born before 31 November 2003

- Mothers automatically have parental responsibility for their children.
- Fathers also have parental responsibility if they were married to the mother when the child was conceived or born, or if they got married to her later.
- Unmarried fathers do not automatically have parental responsibility for their child, but a court order or a parental responsibility agreement can give it to them.
- People looking after your child like childminders or grandparents do not have parental responsibility, but you can authorise them to take medical decisions for your child, if you wish.

For children born after 1 December 2003

- Both of a child's parents have parental responsibility if they are registered on the child's birth certificate. This applies irrespective of whether the parents are married or not.
- Where the child has been formally adopted, the adoptive parents are the child's legal parents and automatically acquire parental responsibility.
- Where the child has been born as a result of assisted reproduction, there are rules under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 that determine the child's legal parentage.
- People looking after your child like childminders or grandparents do not have parental responsibility, but you can authorise them to take medical decisions for your child, if you wish.
